Accessibility notice

Oxford University Press strives to make sure its course content is accessible to the widest possible audience. Courses are, to a large extent, compliant with the WCAG 2.0 guidelines. Where we cannot make interactive objects fully accessible, we aim to provide an alternative version, for example, our media and interactive content contains a text equivalent which seeks to explain the objectives and outputs of the interactive content/media when read by a screen reader. Whilst we make every effort to make our content accessible at publication, universities hosting the courses on their own VLEs/LMSs who choose to customise the content may find the level of accessibility is affected. If you have any difficulty using our courses, please contact technical@epigeum.com.
